

Former prostitutes cover Canadian serial killer trial

Italy's Best Garlic Bread

The most outrageously delicious garlic bread recipe on earth.

Photos of Cute Girls

Browse photos of Tommy Bookmarks near you. Chat, IM and Date free!

Posted : Sun, 04 Feb 2007 05:28:00 GMT

Author : DPA

Category : America (World)

News Alerts by Email click here )

RSS 2.0 Create your own RSS

America World News | Home

Photos of Cute Girls

Browse photos of Tommy Bookmarks near you. Chat, IM and Date free!

Mate1.com

Health Food Franchises

Delicious health food franchise opportunities. Compare info here! www.FranchiseDirect.com

Cookie Fundraisers

Sell Entertainment® Products to Support Your Cause. Learn More Now!

www.Fundraising.Entertainment.com

Vice President Job

Find Job Listings, Salary Info and Industry Specific Resume Tips www.monster.ca

Montreal, Feb 4 (DPA) The details of the serial murders of six prostitutes and drug addicts in Canada's Vancouver have turned so grisly in the second week that some newspapers have stopped printing them, or are offering them only online.

Robert Pickton, 56, stands charged with killing at least 26 of 61 women who vanished over nearly 20 years from the seedy lower east side of Vancouver. For years, police barely raised an eyebrow until they found gruesome evidence on a pig farm outside the western Canadian city.

But for two Canadian reporters, telling the full story is not up for debate.

Pauline VanKoll, 42, and Trisha Baptie, 33, former prostitutes and drug addicts who worked in the same poverty-stricken Vancouver neighbourhood as the victims, are reporting on the trial for orato.com, a citizen journalism website.

The numbing work of the police, sifting through 292,824 cubic metres of soil and sending 400,000 swabs of evidence to the laboratory, helped sweep away Baptie's distrust of the police.

'The police might not have taken the missing women seriously at first, but when they found the first signs of something seriously wrong, it is pretty evident they threw all the resources they could at it,' she wrote.

And while still bitter that her 'friends will still be dead no matter what new policies and procedures', she writes they may not have died 'in vain if through all this, some very serious and open discussions happen around drug detoxification beds, drug rehabilitation', better supports for kids in care and 'safety for the girls on the streets'.

Only the first six cases Pickton is charged with are on trial now, and the remaining 20 are to be tried later over the coming year or more.

Pickton, who has pleaded not guilty, was arrested in 2002, triggering an 18- month forensic marathon on his farm in the Vancouver suburb of Port Coquitlam. Prosecutors say DNA evidence was found from some of the missing women.

The bloody details - of decapitated heads being split in half and other violations - have drawn criticism from readers. Media interest has dropped off dramatically for the second week of the trial with the number of reporters at the courtroom far less than the 350 that were initially accredited.

When the trial opened early last week, many Canadians were angered at the sensational tone of coverage, prompting several media outlets to change their coverage and issue warnings about the graphic material. Some papers offered two formats of coverage: a censored version in print and an uncensored version online.

But for VanKoll and Baptie, the focus is not on the terrifying details but on the victims.

(c) Indo-Asian News Service

- » Print this article
» Email this article (Click Here)
» Share this article on

ManageEngine™ Firewall Analyzer
Cisco Pix Firewall Log Analyzer
Analyze & Generate Bandwidth & Web Usage Reports Based On Cisco PIX Logs
Free Trial
www.fwanalyzer.com

Have your Say
Name
Email
Subject
Your Comment
Enter Verification code
32873A
Submit Reset

- Current News
Russian police detain man wanted for terrorism in Colombia
Maverick German leftist Lafontaine travels to Cuba
Ex-top aide to Brazilian president faces graft trial
Taiwan president visits Nicaragua
Death toll reaches 11 from Hurricane Dean in Mexico
Central America offers support to Taiwan, but asks for money - Summary

Ads by Google
have your say
Google Custom Search
Search

- News by Category
Business
Entertainment
Environment
General
Health
Sports
Technology
World
- Africa
- America
- Asia
- Australasia
- Europe
- India
- Middle East
- UK
- US

- Related Articles
- Ipswich police on look out for serial killer targeting prostitutes | 13 Dec 2006
- Police hunt prostitute serial killer | 10 Dec 2006
- Accused serial killer: 'I got sloppy' | 27 Jan 2007
- Jury selection in serial killing trial | 09 Dec 2006
- Serial killer suspect pleads not guilty | 26 Jan 2007

More America (World) News click here